A chess problem, also called a chess composition, is a puzzle set by the composer using chess pieces on a chess board, which presents the solver with a particular task. For instance, a position may be given with the instruction that White is to move first, and checkmate Black in two moves against any possible defence.

Common knowledge is a special kind of knowledge for a group of agents. There is common knowledge of p in a group of agents G when all the agents in G know p , they all know that they know p , they all know that they all know that they know p , and so on ad infinitum.. The concept was first introduced in the philosophical literature by David Kellogg Lewis in his study Convention (1969).

William Lane Craig is a prolific Christian philosopher, apologist, author, and public debater. He is the best debater – on any topic – that I've ever heard. As far as I can tell, he has won nearly all his debates with atheists. When debating him, atheists have consistently failed to put forward solid arguments, and consistently failed to point out the flaws in Craig's arguments.

I don't know what category this question should be in. Move it to the right category if necessary. Does anyone know why there must be a white square on the right. Besides that the rank and file labeling would be incorrect if the chessboard is setup with a black square on far right. Does it really affect...
