Another tensile fracture mechanism is hydraulic fracturing. In a natural environment, this occurs when a combination of rapid sediment compaction and thermal fluid expansion causes the pore fluid pressure to exceed the pressure of the least principal normal stress.

Fracture (geology) - Wikipedia

A tensile stress is required to cause the failure. Hydrogen diffuses to regions of high tensile stress in a material, such as those at a crack loaded in tension, and concentrates there. The fracture mode can be either transgranular or intergranular.
