At its narrowest point, the Strait of Gibraltar separates Spain from Morocco by just 14.5 kilometers/9 miles. Here, the African and European continents are so close that it's actually possible to swim from one to the other. However, unless you're an athlete in prime condition, it's likely that you're looking for a more conventional mode of transport.

Maps: Morocco doesn't have a huge road network, so a single country-wide map with a scale of 1:1,000,000 is sufficient for initial planning and will also show some of the unsurfaced roads suitable for 4WD traffic. With a map of 1:1,000,000 it's easy to get suckered into days that involve huge distances, so it's as well to look at an equivalent scale map of your home country to give you ...

Round-The-World on a single airline. In the past it was possible to go around-the-world on a single airline. The first to do so was Pan Am in 1947. It flew San Francisco-Honolulu-Hong Kong-Bangkok-Delhi-Beirut-Istanbul-Frankfurt-London-New York in both directions using Lockheed Constellation propeller aircraft. The ticket was valid for 180 days meaning you could stop off anywhere along the route.
